A Vindication Of The Rights Of Men: A vindication of the rights of men, as a letter to the Right Honourable Edmund Burke; occasioned by his reflections on the revolution in France (1790) is a vindication of the rights of men as the first book written by the 18th-century British liberal feminist Mary Wollstonecraft, which attacks aristocratic and ancien régime authorities and institutions. It was the first response to a pamphlet by Edmund Burke which opposed the French Revolution.

A Vindication Of The Rights Of Woman: Published in 1792, A Vindication Of The Rights Of Woman is a philosophical and political essay by Mary Wollstonecraft, in which she argues that women are not naturally inferior to men, but appear to be, because they have not cultivated their intellect. She argues that society has molded women into being inferior by means of education. In her book, she tackles the issues of women's education, marriage, and rights, and calls for the right to vote and education for women.

A Vindication Of The Rights Of Woman: What Was the Main Goal of Wollstonecraft's Advocacy? Mary Wollstonecraft's book, A Vindication of the Rights of Woman, was a radical political pamphlet written in 1792, advocating for the independence of women from the control of men, and arguing for their access to education and civic participation.