

Erin Flannery Keith holds a B.A. from Wellesley College and a J.D. and Certificate in Environmental Law from Pace University School of Law. A native of Connecticut and member of the Connecticut Bar, Erin moved to Washington, D.C. in 2009 and began at EPA as an ORISE Legal Fellow in the Office of Wetlands, Oceans, and Watersheds' Wetlands Division working on Clean Water Act section 404 jurisdictional and regulatory issues. Now, in the Office of Wastewater Management's Water Permits Division, Erin focuses on the legal issues associated with EPA's oversight of authorized state National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System programs. Erin delivered the Introduction to the Clean Water Act lecture at the American Law Institute's Environmental Law conference in 2012 and 2013, and gives a similar talk each year at the Environmental Law Institute's Summer School. Erin also coaches the National Environmental Law Moot Court team at Catholic University School of Law. Her remarks in this course do not represent the position of the U.S. EPA or the U.S. Government.
